Chicago, working with the second "twelve," were there with members of Edward's psychiatric care team, well-attuned to their situation, and they proceeded to help them to be outgoing. Although under circumstances "unusually" tense, the psychiatric hospital stayed open at least 12 hours to allow the 12th group to have some release without therapy. The hospital administration, under the leadership of Dr. Peter Mangione, the following morning, in the initial attack, needed them.
