The Free University at Wayne State is beginning its second term and is looking for students and professors. Anyone can attend and the only qualifications necessary for teaching-age that you have something to profess and can get people to sit through your class.

The Free University is a community project begun by Open City and has a catalog of classes available from the Open City Office, call 831-2770 for more information.

Classes tentatively planned include everything from "Krishna Consciousness 101" to courses about the politics of Detroit and how to play blues harmonica.
